I got to try Craftmas at a holiday party a few weeks ago and figured it would be a fun addition to our Vive collection. It is a fun experience watching your friends try and grasp the idea of 3d drawing. Unlike Tilt Brush the drawing tool in Craftmas is based on volumetrics, so it is like using a clay extruder if that makes any sense. It is a fun approach and getting to see someone use it the first time is quite worth it. I saw everything from people drawing on the side of the art volume like some weird stained glass monstrosity to a guy attempt to make a christmas hat (that in the ealry stages looked way too much like a, well. I will leave that to your imagination.) I didn't notice if there was a way to export my models, but it would be cool to be able to have the system dump them as *.obj or *.stl so we could use our company 3d printer to actually make the ornamants. Overall it was worth the few dollars and would reccamend to a friend with a Vive.. Nice to see a more creative game in a sea of experiences and zombie shooters on Steam. Fun for showing your family VR during the holidays or goofing around with your friends. A little low tech, but definitely worth the current discounted price.
